FALL RIVER, Aug. 1. Senator Carlisle, in his reply to Senator Aldrich, declared that in fifteen "highly protected industries" wages had "Li en since the passage of the McKinley set, "an average of 39-100 of 1 per cent." Among the protected industries named by him was cotton manufactures. Now, Fall River is the largest Leontine Lincoln, of Kilbura, Lincoln & Co., is a member of the firm whichmakes machinery for the cotton miles. He earnestly hedreves in a protective terist, "Fall River, maoufacturers have all they care to do just new," as dhe to-day, "and they do not desire to take orders many months ahead. The market has been deaned of print goods, and they have a takkened to the fact that they must supply it. There is therefore work ahead for themselves and their operatives for months to come As I look at it the McKinley act has enabled the American manufacturers to control the home market for the filter grades of cotton goods. That marke they had to divide formerly with foreigners. Some of our mill owakers have been drawn into the manufacture of the filter grades of cotton goods, and makers of the coherer goods have secured, in this way, a larger market."

He was engaged scraping the main mast, when suddenly the rope which held the "triangle" in which he was scated became loosened in some way and he fell. After going a distance of some twenty-five feet be landed on the gail, turned a complete somersault and then struck on the hatch combing. He jumped up and ran into the cable, from which he, to the surprise of those around, issued in a few moments, apparently ready for work again. When asked if he was not burt, he answered to the effect that he guessed he was "shaken up a bit." The scraping of the mast was not finished that afternoon, however. Randolph.

"In a quarter of an hour, so you've no unduguified gulp, quitting the table and the room in three strides. There was

First Lieuteuant Brewster, commanding the!"Black Horse" troop. It must be confessed that there was about Rolfe an intangible something that ever seemed to give that impression to the juniors

It was one of the things that set their

With a shiver of diagnet he whirled over a page of the album, as though to cover and hide the beguing face, the betraying words, and then Brewster came bounding back shid in. That night, despite the long hours in their ledy ir ends to an informal dance in the boproom It was just a week after Nita Cinthrie's adventure, and already, except in the thoughts of two or three men, that strange affair was a thing of the past. People had settled down to an acceptance of her own ex-planation of the cause, not that it was entirely satisfactory, but because no other seemed plausible. Just why a girl should have been rendered nervous and npect because she had had a proposal, Mrs. Vance of course could not under-stand—'especially," said she, "a gur! who was reputed to have had so many offers " It was laughingly remarked by various military benedicts that since the ment when Miss Guthrie's scream of terror had appalled the garrison the dames and damsels of their several households had shown an unwonted degree of t undity in visiting about the post after nightfall, and that much more than the traditional amount of hunting behind curtains and under bedsteads was now going on.

Beinen was especially jocular, and more than ever disposed to tell his cronies in her presence that Berengaria had said this or Berengaria had done that, the this or that being something more than usually absurd or improbable. But in the conversations held of late in the sanctity of Berengaria's boudour the major had been anything but locular There was one incident of that evening that had caused hum deep perplexity He had never for a moment forgotten his wife' allusions to Winifred—Wini fred, the apple of his eye. The possi bility of her having lost her young heart to, or even having come to frel more than passing interest in, Carroll Brewater was something that troubled him far more than he cared to admit Like many another father he had gone on fancying his daughter only a child—one to whom the idea of falling in love would not present itself for years to come, and then only on parental intr-mation that it was expected of her. Personally and officially he had nothing against Frewster He liked him quite as well as he did any of the junior of-ficers, and he liked most of them very much indeed. It was as soldierly, man ly a lot or young fellows as one could ask to see, but in the close comradeship and intin acy of frontier life men get to know one another so thoroughly and a well that the fables weaknesses an waywardness of the animal are apt to be far more promuently mentioned in a garrison that than his sterling or lovable traits. Some med, it may be said, have to die before their virtues can be in the least appreciated

More than once had the major closely interrogated his wife as to the reason of her statement. Had the young fellow dared to speak to Winifred without first asking his permission? Had Wimfred dared to fall in love before—but no, that was impossible "What makes you think she cares for him?" Why should she care for him anyhow? were the impationt questions that rose to his higs. To one and all she had a mply replied that she knew because she knew—woman's unanswerable No Winifred had not told he They had never exchanged a word upon the subject No. Mr Brewster had not spoken 1 by that was meant of love or marriage, for Winifred would have told her on the mstant, But half a dozen other people had spoken. The whole garrison could see he was deeply in love with her. Every glance, word, gesture, act, told the story with unerring cer-tainty. "Is there a day, is there an hour, when it is possible for him to see her, speak with her, that he is not by her side" asked Mrs. Berrien. "You must realize it, major, and you must de-cide what should be done. She likes him well that I know, for she is ever ready to dance with him or ride with him, and I can see how hereyes brighte and her color rises when his step or his your is heard on the verands."

[to be continued] What's be use a sting a man where he got that esugh? He can't tell you. And what's the difference anyway. Lell him to go and buy a bottle of Ademson's Botanic Cough Balsam and use it.

Additional Details of the Accident.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 6. Additional details of the accident of the Lake Shore Railroad are to the effect that the first of the weathound freight trains was a slow freight and was making a siding at Harbor Creek to allow a fast one to pass while making a siding the Chicago Express train came along and crashed into the freight. William Weish, engineer, Jacob Burkaer, freman of the passenger train of Baffalo, were lilled; also a passenger whose name has not been learned. The occupants of the Buffalo har had a miraculous e scape whe car being wholly wrecked.

GANADIAN BARLWAYS. Smeral Manager Sargent, of Grand Trunk, Interviewed

MONTREAT, Aug. 6. General Manager Sergent, of the Grand Trusk Railway Cycipany, in an interview on the proposed retaliation by the United States sgainst Camedian railways, said last night be was suprised at the action of some of the United States Senators who were securing retaliatory legislation. There is no good reason for it that he can see and it is apparently aimed at the Grand Trunk. He cited Senator Chandler's action in infroducing a bill against the Grand Trunk, while that railwa; had most algually benefited the State of New Hampshire, which he represents. It was nothing until the Grand Trunk went into it. The same could be said of Portland, Maine. It was the Grand Trunk first, sided by Canadian Pacific, more recently, that made Portland an ocean poet.

CHICAGO, Aug. 6. A local paper says one of the largest swindles ever attempted in Chicago has just been anearthed. It appears that title deeds have been forged covering a hall section of kind, valued at from $750,000 to $1,000,000, the property of Hetty R. Green, the richest woman in the world. Porged deeds are still in the hands of the forgers as far as is known. It was through the attempt to borrow money on some of the property and dispose of ether tracts of it in this city through the forged paper, that the truth became known.

Sepretary Foster gave a historical account of American currency from the time of the colonies to the present day; of the panics of 1814, 1837 and 1867, and the disastrous results that followed each He said "The derasjement of the paper currency was the important factor in each of the time revulsions. The trouble was always preceded by a period of great prosperity The people were growing rich. They desired to grow rich faster. To this and to this end they substituted for segitimate enterprise, wild speculation, in which they were added, and indeed often led, by such of the banks as were untrammeled by restraining laws Had the banks conflued their issues of paper money to the proper needs of trada and industry, the panic in each case would doubtless have been less intense and the recovery from the depression more rapid

As Enterview with John Brillen.

London, Aug. 6. _ on an interview yesterday John Dillon asche about reports printed in some of the English papers, that certain Irish members might take office under Mr. Morley. Mr. Dillon said such a thing was text to impossible. No member of the party, he declared, would dare to accept a place under any English government. When asked if he could communicate what modifications Gladstone had made in his Home Rule bill, Mr. Dillon replied he was not at liberty to say snything except that the bill was likely to be one that Parnell would have accepted, and adding, "we will not take anything less," Mr. Gladstone knows our position in the matter is definite and inflexible. He has pledged himself to alsoe the Home Rule in front of nite and inflexible. He has pledged himself to place the Home Rule in front of all other measures and to keep it there until it is passed. If the Liberals about after their policy we will at once surpend our support of the Liberal government Our position is one of entire independence. Our all sace with the Liberals is to carry Home Rule. By that we shall abide. We will support them as long as they keep to Parnell's bill, not a mement long-er."

There are 8 cities in the State having a population of from 8,174 in Rockland, to, 36,426, in Portland These cities are: Auburn, Augusta, Bangor, Bath, Bildeford, Lewiston, Portland, and Rockland. In these cities 36.23 per cent. of the home families own and 63 77 per cent hire the homes that they occupy, 81 78 per cent. of the total owning families own their homes free of incumbrance and 18.27 per eest subject to incumbrance, and 29 61 per cent or the total number of home | |st, | visction for the am y, swning and hiring families own free of ||st, | visction for the am y, incumbrance and 6 42 per dent. own 2nd, Your Own Got d Leter . N. homes that are incumbered. The incumbrance on the homes in these cities bears a slightly greater ratio to the value of those that are incumbered than is the case with the homes and farms of the cation to State, the ratio for city homea being 39 35 per cent. The average rate of interest on incumbered city homes is 5.92 per cent , which is below the average rate borne by the farms and homes of the state and the average annual interest charge to each family eccupying and owning an incumbered home in these 8 cities is $40 line average city home owned and incumbered is worth $2,812, and the average incumbrance thereon is $1,100. Stated in the most concise way the facts which were the chief objects of this investigation are that in every 180 farms, on the average, 8 are bired, 20 are owned under incumbrance, and 72 are owned without inchmbrance; that in every 100 homes, on the average, 52 are hired, 10 are owned under incumbrance, and 38 are owned without incumbrance, and that in the × cities previously mentioned, in every 100 homes, on the average, 54 are hired, 7 are owned with incumbrance, and 29 are owned without inchmbrapee,

"The Inherent Right to Labor."

It would be interesting to know just that Senator Palmer means by man's inherent right to labor. ' Does he mean that any individua can come out of the street lote your house, your office, or your factory, and demand and receive employment on terms of his own dictation and for a period to be determined by himself? Does be mean that employers and proprietors have no right to distriminate as to whom they will employ or to the condimons upon which the employe shall work. If he means this, then he is the prophet of an anarchy more violent and more permeibus than was advocated by Parsons, I mgg and Spies
And yet if he does not mean this, what does he mean. The Virginia bill of rights

"All men we by nature equally free and independent and have certain inherent rights of which, when they enter into a state of society they cannot by any compact deprive or divest their posterity—namely the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the means of acquiring and possessing property, and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety. benator Pa mer s speech might be construed as an elaboration of this admirable. Ordered principle but for the fact that it was delivered in defence of the Holnestead rioters and in arrogament of the (arnegie

ompany

That circumstance effectually excludes any such theory. The Homestead rioters it sorted to murderous violence in order to deny to other men the "inheront right to liabor." Senator Psinier could not applicable them is the same breath in which he advocated the principle set up in the Virginia bill of rights.

We confess that, unless the distinguished Senator be in fact, what his tinguished senator be in fact, what his language would seem to indicate, a straightant, uncompromising champion of anarchy we utterly fail to grasp his meaning The one power which absolutely denies "man's inherent right" is

Taking it for granted that the pity had a legal right to receive the Hersey money in trust as it did and that it has a right to use it for the purpose of a city building as proposed, the only remaining question is whether it is advisable and for the best interest of the city to so dispose of the money thus entrusted to its keeping The objection, that by so doing the city debt is increased to the amount thus expendeli, loses all its force when it is considered that the bebt is already incurred. the cit, by accepting the trust, having made itself liable for its perpetual preservation and care It is already a debt which the city owes and for which it is bound to provide an annual reasonable income for the

Granted again, Dick-very different; so much so that were things as they used to be I would be utterly opposed to her marrying in the army?" This being just exactly the view the major had not taken, he could only stare at her in astonishment

"Hess, what on earth do you mean?"
"Just what I say, Richard. I like what I've seen of Mr. Brewster very muc., and I don't wonder Winnie fancies him. He is a gentleman; he is a fine soldier; he has a good record; he is well connected; his family is one of the best that you or I know; he has every thing in point of fact to recommend him that you had, my liege, and he has none of your bad habits. You used to trink and smoke and play poker, and, Richard, sometimes you used to swear." "Well, everybody did in those days."

"Exactly, and hardly anybody does Exactly, and hardly anybody does today, except perhaps one hears a little odd language when the wind is blowing from the drill ground. But in other respects things are indeed different. You and your cronies sometimes talk about how slow and how indifferent young officers are now as compared with wha they were twenty years ago. Dick, if the army were today what it was when I married you I would whisk Winnie out of this garrison and never let her venture inside another. But it isn't. In every possible way that a woman and a mother can see it is vastly better, and you know it. I can conceive of worse fates for our daughter than that she should marry such a man as Mr. Brewster and into such a society as we have here today. You are eagerly lookinay nere tousy. Too are eagerly too, ing forward to your promotion. Do you think being lieutenant colonel with compensate you for leaving such contrades and friends as you have in the Twelftn?"

Nothing, except why why, Bess, thing, this affair with Mrs. —, you know.

"As atterly one sided an affair as ever was known," mid Mrs. Berrien stoutly. believe I can see clear through it. 1 despise the woman. She has always made a dead set at some one of the officers stationed here, I am told. She was just as absurd about Mr. Martin, of the Eleventh—everybody says so in town and she picked out Brewster because he was the handsomest of the new los when our regiment came in. Ask any one you choose, and I think my view will hold good. Ask Captain Rolfe whahe thinks, and he and Mr. Brewster are not on friendly terms." "I have salted Rolfe: I asked him only thes evening," replied Berrien, turning reader, "and he begged to be excused from expressing an opinion "

Well, he wouldn't say, but he has seen something or other that we hadn't and he doem't like Brewster. I can't have a man making love to Winnie on minute and that kalsomined creature the next. I wish there were no dance topight. I want to see Rolfe again. Who

"In touch with the house," so to speak, and gave him opportunities at east of occasional rd with the beautiful girl whom he so admired.

He knew he was no match for Brew-He knew he was so match for Brewster so far as physicise or reputation was concerned, but then girls had been nown to prefer pstrimonial estate to resonal charms, and he meant at least to try the effect of his solid qualifiestions as against those which made Brewster so attractive to the sex. He knew the major liked him well enough, and he thought he could count on the good better or Mrs. Berrien but he was not ffices of Mrs. Berrien, but he was no so sure about Win fred. When the so sure about Wir. fred. When the ovial major appeared he was in readiness to pay his respects at once, and was cordially welcomed by that red faced veteran; so was Randolph; and then there stood Brewster at Winnie's ide, both, as it so happened, looking straight at him.

"Well, by Jove, they do make an almost ideat couple? he said to himself.

Brewster fair, stalwart, straight and soldierly, a picture of manliness and rigor. Winifred dark, yet with so rich soldierly, a picture of maniness and rigor. Winifred dark, yet with so rich a glow mantling the boft, creamy skin with such glorious, deep brown-black eyes, so lovely and alphder and graceful a form. Her shapely head seemed just in a level with his broad shoulder, and something he had been saying to her in a low tone just as the others were greeting her father had sent the blood surgent to her cheek. Serrien thought she mg to her cheek. Serrien thought she had never seemed so beautiful, even in his fond eyes. For the first time he be gan to realize it was a woman, not a child, who stood before him. No won der Brewster loved her with his whole soul. Why, if he didn't! Pshaw! what was he thinking of "How are you, Brewster, lad? Glad "How are you, Brewster, lad? Chad you're here' so early. Your troop made my eyes dance this afternoon." Oh, surrender ignominious! So ended hisefort to be repellent. How could he be with Winifred's soft eyes looking at him so wistfu ly, so fornily?

And it was good to see Brewster's appreciation of the veteran's allusion to his troop. Gorham, the captain, had been away on leave for some weeks, during away on leave for some weeks, during which time the lieutenant had had com mand, and, soldier that he was, had done his atmost to improve the drill and efficiency of his men. It was about the only troop that did not come in for a rasping of some kind at the hands of the colonel trust afternoon, and being in Berrien's battalion reflected credit of course upon the major. Brewster's eyes had kindled and he had lowered his saber in glad acknowledgment of the brief words of commendation that fell from Farquhar's lips as he completed his rigid Farquhar's lips as he completed his rigid inspection of the spripment of the glossy blacks, and the major had supplemented the words by a nod and a glance that spoke volumes. But while all this was a joy to his soul, it was as nothing as compared with theing praised by her father in her hearing. At that precise moment Carroll Brewster stood the happiest man within the limits of a crowded country.

And now at ten o'clock the hoproout And now at ten o'clock the hoprooth was well filled. A number of pleasant people had driven out from town. All the garnson girls were there, most of the elders among the mammas, all the juniors among the matrons, and the dance went merrily on. Delightful music the orchestra of the Twelfth was ever ready to play, and this hight their leader seemed inspired. The affair was entirely informal. No written invitaentirely informal. No written invita-tions had been sent out. Officers were all in undress uniform, but, with few exceptions, all were there, and the br stripes of scarlet or yellow or white were to be seen everywhere throughout the room. Mrs. Berrien, a smile of motherly pride in her handsome dark eyes, was chatting pleasantly with the wife of a local magnate, who could not say enough about Wintred's grace and beauty, and the gaze of both women seemed to follow the child as she appeared literally to float over the smooth-ly polished floor, just 'lightly borne on Brewster's stalwart arm. It was one of the oldest and sweetest of the Strauss waltzes that was being played at the moment, "Geschichten aus dem Wienmoment, "Geschichten aus dem Wienerwald," and slowly reversing and turning, with the eyes of more than half the spectators and wall flowers upon them, Brewster and Winifred were now gliding acress the upper end of the hall within a few feet of the amiling row of lookers on, a most with-in touch of the mother's hand. His face re a look no woman could for an instant mistake. His eyes, full of passionate tenderness, were fixed at the instant upon her lovely face. His line were moving. Something was being

"There is one couple at least that is ntterly lest to the rest of the world," said Mrs. Vance, for of a sudden the lovely upturned face was bowed almost upon his arm, and the deep, dark eyes were veiled, and the soft flush seemed to lean through the creamy skin to her very temples.

"Oh, has that fellow Ridgeway no sense whatever?" she continued, with all a woman's horror of an interrupted love scene, for at the instant Ridgeway had darted forth, watch in hand, with a triumphant shout: "Time! My half:"
And without a word, with one swift noward glance into Brewster's longing eyes—a glance fairly brimming over with meaning—Winifred released ber-self from the balf ductroling arm and placed her hand on Ridgeway's eleeve. Another moment and she was being whirled away under the guidance of a very different partner.

"Miss Berrien's fan," said Brewster bowing a moment later before her mother. "I was charged to place it in your hands." His beart was beating high. The music seemed thrilling, obbing through his veins. He longer to hold forth both hands and say: "Read my secret. Know my heart! I love her! oh, I love her!" But there sat Mrs. Van pathy and approval glowing in her good

"Ah, Mr. Brewster, it wasn't easy to give up half that dance—was it, now? Why do you do such taings in the

"There were only four waltace, Mrs. Van Ness," smiled Mrs. Berrien. "Mr. Brewster had bed over and had claim this, and Mr. Ridgeway and had none at all, and Wimirred and I you thought he ought not to be dembe entirely. It is the only round dame he knows."

the only round dance he known.

Saying no word, Engwater had dropped behind have Barriant chair.

"He doesn't know that any too well," said him, Van Niga to herealt. Where could he have learned to dance?
